Effect of corn genotypes on ruminal amino acid flow and concentration in cows and heifers. Four trials were conducted to determine if there is a genotypic response in rumen fluid amino acid flow and concentration in the postruminal gut of cows and heifers fed a 50:50 blend of a high protein (22%) corn and a low protein (10%) corn. The diets were formulated to supply isocaloric rations to evaluate amino acid availability. Corn genotypes were determined by analyzing 50 samples per genotype and sampling two cows and two heifers on each sampling date from a single Cornell research herd in two trials. In three of the four trials, the high protein corn contained beta-glucanase enzyme and the low protein corn did not contain the enzyme. The enzyme alters rumen fermentation, amino acid supply to the abomasum, or both and may improve growth in diets containing high levels of dietary fiber. A 5-h rumen infusion was used in two trials to evaluate the effect of corn genotype on ruminal amino acid flow and concentration. In trial 1, cows and heifers fed high protein corn fed a concentrate based diet had greater intake of gross energy (19 kg) and digested starch (11 kg) compared with those fed low protein corn. Amino acid intake was higher in cows fed high protein corn (20.3 g/100 g vs. 17.3 g/100 g, P = 0.048) than in heifers fed high protein corn (11.8 g/100 g vs. 10.9 g/100 g, P = 0).
