What's New in the Death Star Clock?

Based on Chrome Clock Widget by Ken Mastri. Star Wars and all related images - Copyright Lucasfilm, Ltd. This clock lets you calculate the time by adding or subtracting the amount of days in each month. For example, there are 31 days in June, so June is "0.0 days" and the time is "06:00:00am". On the other hand, if the amount of days in the current month is 30, 30 is the time: "30:00:00am". Since each month has a different amount of days, you can calculate the correct time for any month! The basic operation is simple: add or subtract the amount of days in a month to get the day and time. Press the plus button to see the time in that month. You can also use the widget's time indicator. If you press the three dots button, you will see the time for all the months. Finally, press the "Toggle calendar" button to get the current month, last month, or the next/previous month. Update The issue you're having is that this is a reference to the li element, not the input element, so you can't look at the input elements attribute. Trump's legal team is particularly concerned with a statement made last month by Paul Manafort, the former Trump campaign chairman who is currently facing indictment on charges of money laundering, fraud and other crimes. In an interview with The New York Times, Manafort claimed that he had hoped to brief the president on his work for Ukraine's then-president Viktor F. Yanukovich, not to include anything improper. A spokesman for Trump's legal team, Marc Kasowitz, called that assertion "absurd" in a statement last month, saying that Manafort had "lied" to the paper. Kushner and Trump's legal team are looking at six points of contact Manafort had with a
