Apr 2, 2011 HERE IS THE LINK ABOUT XPLODE 4.0:1.A flight from Knoxville to Raleigh, North Carolina, was forced to make an emergency landing in Tennessee, after a passenger sustained a serious injury in the boarding process. Airline officials told the Knoxville News Sentinel that the 66-year-old woman was "jumped" and assaulted by a fellow passenger as she attempted to board. Officials said she was hit in the back of the head, knocked to the ground and had her neck "swung" around. "She was crying and screaming," the paper quoted her husband, who boarded the flight as she waited, as saying. "I've never been through anything like that," she told him. The Associated Press quoted flight crew saying the woman might have "felt threatened" by the other passenger. "We were trying to be calm about it and not worry about being charged... it was just a violent attack," the couple told the AP. New sheriff in town: Final weeks of David Duke At least one other passenger came to her aid. When the other person, who was in the last row of the aircraft, found out about the assault, she was so upset she immediately confronted the man, and the assault stopped, the Knoxville News Sentinel reported. The paper quoted the plane's captain as saying "it's a good thing we were able to land safely because there was another passenger who stepped in to get the other passenger." The FBI has been notified of the incident, according to ABC News. In December, a number of protesters held a demonstration in Raleigh, calling on former Ku Klux Klan leader David Duke to leave the state over comments he made that were widely interpreted as racist. The flight, a Delta Connection from Knoxville to Raleigh-Durham International Airport, landed safely after landing in Chattanooga, Tennessee, but was back 570a42141b
