Antivirusprogr. Shots of the Week: January 17, 2012 Possession: Arizona's Fab Melo

has a 13-foot, second-half 3-pointer. Kansas' Marcus Morris drops the ball, but the defender's hands are coming over: The shot is called off. (Not the shot itself, but the general reaction to it.) The play is reviewed and the referee rules: Three-second violation. A media scrum forms around Melo: Is Melo's shot legal? The ref says Melo made the shot while the ball was being released. The ball is official by the time he gets up. Melo is fine. Fab Melo has made a go of it — the NBA's scoring leader's 11th 3-pointer on the night helps the Mavs edge San Antonio, 93-91. Meanwhile, at the other end, Kawhi Leonard takes a few steps around the perimeter before he nails a huge three.

While I like the shot, I don't think the ref should have called it. Melo let the ball go before he shot it, so the ref should have called a 3-second violation. What's the point of reviewing a shot that is already in the past? Is it to see if a ball is truly in the air? That's pretty absurd to me. You don't even have to get up to see if there's an issue. You just have to make sure the ball is in the air. It's not fair to call a shot that was already in the past. If you're going to say the shot is in the air, the ref should still call a violation. It's better to just call a violation than to call something that isn't really a foul. It's not going to change the outcome of the game. What makes this shot more legit than the 3-pointer Melo hit right before the shot was reviewed? Melo was already finished shooting the ball. He didn't even have the ball in the shot. He let it go. The ref should have called it a violation, but they didn't. That's what is so

Crack KEYGEN.RARMurine single cell polymerase chain reaction: a tool for a low number of cells. Single cell PCR is becoming an increasingly attractive method for the detection of low viral loads in clinical samples. We developed a method for the amplification of a specific DNA sequence from a single cell in a polyacrylamide gel. Direct amplification of the specific DNA sequence by non-radioactive dNTP labeling and restriction enzyme digestion followed by ligation is more sensitive than PCR. Amplification is initiated by treating the single cell with a single-stranded DNA-specific nicking enzyme (S1 nuclease) followed by exonuclease III digestion. The resulting DNA molecules are visualized by fluorescence microscopy using an in situ single cell fluorescence detection method.

Q: How to create a composite primary key based on two columns other than primary key value in sql server? I have a studentid and studentname column in a table named studentdetails. It is possible to create a composite primary key (i.e., studentid+studentname) and construct a composite identity column for this compound primary key using the below sql statement. create table studentdetails ( studentid int, studentname nvarchar(max)

); create table studentdetails (studentid int not null identity, studentname nvarchar(50) not null); I am not able to understand how to achieve the same using multiple column instead of composite key. I have tried the below but it gives error.

create table studentdetails (studentid int, studentname nvarchar(max) studentid int, studentname nvarchar(50)); A: You can do this in 2 steps. First, create a separate table with studentid and studentname.

create table studentid_studentname (studentid int, studentname nvarchar(50));

Once this is complete, then you can use a

CREATE VIEW over that studentid_studentname table to create your table. create view studentdetails as
