Import Table from Excel is an add-in for Microsoft Office Excel, which enables users to import the content of a wide range of Excel spreadsheets into database tables. The program is available for Microsoft Excel 2013 and above. The program allows the user to load data rows from Excel spreadsheets into a new or existing database table. This tool is extremely easy to use. No programming knowledge is needed. The user can select the source data for loading. After that, Import Table from Excel generates SQL scripts for data load. After that, the user has the possibility to test the generated script manually. The user can modify the generated script in a simple manner and immediately run it again. Import Table from Excel creates the data load script and saves it into a database table specified by the user. The user can use the created save file for later runs or for generating new data load scripts. The program supports all modern Oracle database servers and all versions of Excel. This tool can be useful for all users who want to import content from Microsoft Excel spreadsheet into database tables. The program is able to save the parameters of a certain import operation in order to run the same project at a later date. Note that there are many articles on the Internet that list columns that must be explicitly converted in the INSERT statement (for example, this). Your best bet is to follow their advice and convert all columns that might be considered important. INSERT INTO yourTable( col1, col2, col3, col4, col5, ... ) SELECT col1, col2, col3, col4, col5, ... A: You should not be creating a user defined table with table type column, unless you are going to use it to import data from another source. In most cases, if you're looking to have a new table in your database that contains the data for a given Excel worksheet, you should load the data directly from Excel and then insert it into the table. I am sure that there is a VB script or Java program that could do this for you, but when I wrote a program to do this for a client with some reasonable success.

1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to detergent compositions for the external, prolonged and/or superficial treatment of the human skin, especially after the application of one or more cosmetic or dermatological preparations, especially those which are applied on the skin for the purpose of cosmetic and/or dermatological treatment, or for care products for children, especially in the form of diaper-rash powders, diaper-rash ointments, bath products, lotions or shampoos, or those cosmetic and/or dermatological preparations which are intended to help ensure general hygiene or protection of the skin. The compositions in accordance with the invention contain a surface-active compound which is capable of reducing the tensions of the upper layers of the skin, having a low sensory acceptability, in particular in the form of an oil-in-water emulsion, and an adjuvant which retards the diffusion and/or the elimination of the surface-active compound.
