What's new:

Mrs. Larwood, Worthing Jackie Fisher, 36, had meant to go home and dust off her Bunghole Club slippers—she was just back from vacation in Mexico to a Worthing conference of which she was Grand Mistress—but Jean, her younger daughter, wasn't having any of that. "Mother, every time I look at you, I'm so happy that Daddy is still alive." The woman who had raised five children was radiant. "Daddy," she said, "it's been five years! And look at you." She snaked her arms around him as if he were a dangerous pet. Her daughter's capacity for torment amused him. "You should have come over," he said, "twice and twice only." "When you are with Jean I'm here." He knew what she was after. For two days he'd been refining his season's first season's plans, and Jean would have none of it. He opened the dark green shopping bag she had brought back with her, got out a flask of Cristal Yborre pineapple brandy he had taken the trouble to find—"almonds," he teased—and a kitchen knife that he thought the old girl shouldn't have, but he'd be damned if he was going to waste the calories on it. She drank half the bottle as he uncorked it. For a moment they stared at each other. Her eyes were flushed the color of his. If this was the reward for his exemplary fatherhood, he'd be disappointed; it didn't match what he had seen in some of the previous set-ups. Someone else snorting glue came to mind. "Our first date. In St. Martin?" He thought back. "You talk about lots of things, darling." She took another sip. "I even remember the church," she said. That appealed to him. "God, it's a long time." "Since we've had any sleep, but I owe you quite a lot of time." ❖
