similarly, to make it easier to jump out of the chat sidebar into your normal messages, facebook has added a “back” button above the friend list. this is a cool new feature, because you can now “back” to your normal messages, and then go to the side bar to search for the friend you were just chatting with. 3. messages can be sent through the new contact list. you may notice that sometimes, if you write someone in the to box, you may not be taken directly to that box, but to a new contact list where you have to click on people to see which of them you want to send messages to. as shown in the screenshot above, you can right click on the tab to take you to the contact list for that person. you can then select the person you want to send a message to in that list, and click send. unlike many older features, like apps or photo albums, this feature is completely facebook's own. we can only assume that this feature is fairly new to facebook and that they will be adding it to many other platforms in the future. the message seems to have been recently rolled out, with over an 800 million active users by the end of september. (remember that 1.49 billion figure earlier?) so it seems to be taking some time for more people to discover it. (this feature was pretty well-hidden!) who knows, it could be that facebook is taking a leaf out of google+'s book. they rolled out a similar feature in google+ for similar reasons. no reason to go through the trouble of diving in and out of different apps and user accounts.

personally, i think the new algorithm is a little easier for me to navigate. i still like to click and like some quirky or funny blog posts on blogs that i follow, still, lets me see all sorts of things i would have missed before. perhaps take a trip down memory lane to keep some of the fun in your life. but so many users are complaining about this and so many have commented that it is because theyve been posting too much before, thus driving them off the site. theres no doubt this new ranking is more effective for me, but i do feel it is driving fewer potential friends (me included) off the site. (see image below) facebook is rolling out upgraded news feed to the web on wednesday. the updates will include everything from the new chat sidebar to a less cluttered friend list to news feed improvements to usernames being able to be displayed with icons instead of just symbols. some of these updates have been considered for some time, but it could not be confirmed whether the revised news feed has in fact been rolled out or not. whatever the case may be, users are expected to see some changes soon as the updated news feed should become live later this week. facebook will also be introducing some more features with the new news feed, such as allowing users to respond to and view posts in the news feed with the click of a button. the new layout means users will be able to click on a post to view the page it was posted on, see who posted the post and who responded to it. however, the most surprising aspect of the new news feed is that posts will no longer be displayed in chronological order. instead, facebook users will see posts based on the number of times they're "liked", followed, responded to, etc.
