I'm actually considering switching from a standalone navigator to sygic mobile maps 10 once it comes out. Aura looks interesting as well. The problem is that I use GPS as a compass quite a lot, and it often happens that I get a "No GPS signal available" message when trying to plot a route on the Aura map. I have no idea what this could be or why it happens, but it happens quite often. My friend has Sygic and doesn't have the problem and uses the driving app as his compass. Could it be a problem with my gadget, or that I'm missing something important? Thanks. I am trying to create an app that will display images from different folders, say / images, / music, / video. I created a folder for each category to get the information and load it into the app as an image that I created. I don't think I'm missing anything, but I'm having trouble displaying the images in the app. I created a folder for each image and put it in a subfolder with the following folder in the folder: / images / images / music / images / video / images / music / images / music / images / music / images (c) The musical Wake Up and Sing, written in 1940 when the author, Mikhail Ptashuk, was 18 years old, premiered this week as part of the Russian Classics on Broadway musical project in downtown New York City. Prior to that, Ptashuk participated in the creation of the musical "On the Wedding Day," which was shown in several dozen theaters in the USSR. "Rise and Shine!" - a continuation of the theme. The libretto is based on a story by Czech writer Vratislav Gashek about the lives of the inhabitants of a gypsy tabor and their children. The plot of the musical is reminiscent of the famous "Carmen": the main character, Gipsy Katya, is waiting for her lover and flees the tabor with him. She meets love and dies when she discovers her lover has married another. The Russian text and music of "Awake and Sing!" was written by Mikhail Ptashuk and co-written by Elena Surzhikova. In "Awake and Sing!" there is this line: "I would like to be like birds - free and free." With this song, the young singer, who was named Ninotchka by her parents, became the "Golden Fish" of "Morning Star. Later, Ninotchka performed at "Slavonic Bazaar" and an international pop song contest in Sopot - and everywhere she sang to the accompaniment of her father. "I think he was her first mentor," says Elena Surzhikova. - When Ninotchka was only three years old, he brought her to the choir and taught her how to hold notes correctly.
