More particularly, this invention is concerned with a method for detecting the presence of blood in urine which utilizes spectrophotometric analysis of the urine and of a reagent solution. The analysis of urine for the presence of blood is of particular interest in the area of ambulatory/out-patient treatment of patients. In such cases it would be desirable that only a few samples of the urine be required for analysis. In particular, in the case of pre-hospital treatment of patients, it is necessary that a simple, yet reliable and fast technique be employed for detecting the presence of blood in the urine. Conventional techniques for determining the presence of blood in urine include centrifuging a urine sample, and observing the resultant sediment in a Petri dish. Such techniques are very time consuming and may be inaccurate or may even be totally unsuitable for use in ambulatory/out-patient treatment. The present invention seeks to provide an alternative technique for detecting the presence of blood in urine.
